"For his commencement speech to students at Columbia University School of the Arts, which was published in The New York Review on the 10th July 2014, the great American writer, Hilton Als eloquently described artists as 'builders and destroyers of truth and memory, makers who take from the past—their memories—to create a present that shimmers with veracity and poetry."

Als borrowed his title, Ghosts in Sunlight from Truman Capote's 1967 essay written on the set of the film adaptation of his 1966 novel, In Cold Blood.

I have stolen it again for this exhibition, which takes place at the height of summer in the gallery at Thirsk Hall, a house steeped in history, standing on the flat land between the dales and moors of North Yorkshire.

There are ghosts here, so it seemed fitting. But it was also Als's ode to artists that spurred me into thinking about why these paintings and sculptures are being brought together.

This approach is at the heart of all of the works exhibited and conveniently connects the two historic painters, Edward Burra and Frank Walter with this group of contemporary artists; allowing us to see how artworks from different periods can sing together in harmony whilst also triggering new unexpected readings.

Mid-20th Century English painter Edward Burra's watercolour and gouache, Composition (1933–34) is heavily influenced by Surrealism with multiple perspectives and symbols and yet the image exudes a vibrancy and expressiveness that still resonates today. Burra's work floats in its own space in time; clearly not the present, but certainly not rooted in the 1930s. It's a world he has envisioned but one that touches our senses.

Artist and writer Frank Walter was born in Antigua in 1926, returning to live and work there in the early 1970s after spells in Europe and Dominica, and remaining on the island until his death in 2009. His dreamlike landscapes were born from continuous observations of nature although the resulting images are so magical in form and palette, they enter another realm beyond his era and place of birth.

Andrew Cranston, Alastair Mackinven, Kaye Donachie, Behrang Karimi, Oliver Bak, Anton Munar, Mark Barker and Robbie Fife all make figurative works that transport us into their own orbit albeit one imbued with the richness of historical figures as much as their daily lives.

Alvaro Barrington, Mary Ramsden, Libasse Ka, Anderson Borba, Raphael Egil and Andrew Miller are more closely engaged with abstraction but the figure is never far away. Subtle references act like traces to something familiar but out of reach. Something that only colour, surface and texture might convey more successfully."

Upcoming Exhibitions

Glimpse of Light in Darkness Elpida Hadzi-Vasileva The Orangery,Thirsk Hall Sculpture Garden Opening 5 July 2024

Elpida Hadzi-Vasileva is an internationally recognised, contemporary visual artist working across sculpture, installation, print and architectural interventions. Hadzi-Vasileva was commissioned by the Vatican for the Pavilion of the Holy See, at the 56th International Art Exhibition with her work Haruspex (2015) and represented the country of her birth, Macedonia, at the 55th International Art Exhibition, La Biennale di Venezia, with Silentio Pathologia (2013).

Hadzi-Vasileva's artworks are in public collections including Luxelakes a4 Museums, Chengdu, China; The Vatican; Soho House; Pooseum, Australia; Office of Public Works, Dublin, Ireland; Križanke, Ljubljana, Slovenia; Casoria Contemporary Art Museum, Napoli, Italy; Osten, Skopje, Macedonia; MIMA, Middlesbrough and New Hall Art Collection, Cambridge and private collections around the world.

Her materials range from the extraordinary to the ordinary, and the ephemeral or discarded to the highly precious; they have included fallen trees, foodstuffs and precious metals. One of her signature pieces Fragility (2015) made with hanging layers of caul fat.

Central to her practice is a response to the particularities of place, its history, locale, environment and communities. Her work reflects a continuing interest in how humanity behaves in our exploitation and destruction of nature and how urbanisation and consumerism impacts our environment. It also reflects on the experience of fleeing war and hunger; the transmission of disease from untouched parts of our world leading to pandemics, and global warming. Unusual natural materials are used to critically consider the fragility of nature and make the viewer think, respond and react. Hadzi-Vasileva is interested in how the exchange of knowledge might develop through collaborative working and in the contexts of landscape, heritage, science and community as offered by each location.
